The Commission E approved the internal use of elder flower for colds. The British Herbal Compendium lists its uses for common cold, feverish conditions, and as a diuretic. In the US and Germany it is used as a component of compounds for cold and flu.

Elderberry is active against the herpes type I & II virus. It has been used for upper respiratory infections, bladder and yeast infections.

Elderberry has been shown to be effective against all strains of influenza. It stimulates the immune system making it effective against other viruses. It has been approved for upper respiratory infections and as a diuretic. In addition, it has been used to reduce inflammation in the urinary tract and bladder.

It has been shown to be effective against many bacterial infections.

While there have been no studies of Elderberry in pregnant and lactating females, both have been used by pregnant and lactating women for years without reported problems.

Echinacea enhances the activity of the immune system, relieve pain, reduce inflammation, has antiviral and antioxidant effects.
